How to determine whether a job is vacant?

To determine whether a job is vacant during the month, ask yourself the following questions: "If a candidate were selected, hired and available to start during the month, would the job be available? Would a new employee have tasks to perform?" In determining this, you must not take into account the ability to hire quickly.

Here are two examples of jobs that are not vacant, and therefore should not be reported for this survey:

Example 1: An employee holds a position, but will be leaving in three months. You are therefore actively looking for a candidate who could replace him. The person would not start work this month. For the purposes of this survey, this job is not vacant.

Example 2: On the first day of the month, you are actively recruiting externally to create a list of potential candidates. You have not identified a specific job to be filled within the month, but the list will be useful to quickly meet any labour requirements, when necessary. For the purposes of this survey, this is not a job vacancy.

Externally: Outside your business or organization. If you are seeking candidates both within and outside your business or organization, please include these job vacancies. If you are seeking a candidate internally only, this vacancy should not be reported for the purposes of this survey.

Job Vacancy and Wage Survey (JVWS)
2015 / Main / EQ

Active recruitment: Recruitment is active if the recruiting process began on or before the first day of the month and was still ongoing on the first day of the month, regardless of whether activities took place specifically on this day.

The description on file for this business comes from the North American Industrial Classifications System (NAICS). This database contains a limited number of activity classifications. The classifications on file might be applicable for this business, even if it's not exactly how you would describe this business's main activity.

By selecting 'Yes, this is the main activity.', you indicate that the description is applicable, and it describes the main economic activity which typically generates the most revenue for this business.

By selecting 'No, this description is not applicable.', you indicate that this description is not applicable as a main or a secondary activity of this business. You will be given a chance to describe this business's main activity, and select an appropriate classification.
